Before School Starts

Important things to remember is to establish a school routine early and consistently, restrict kid's screen time, communicate with a child about school in a gentle and understanding manner, read books together to ease into the transition weeks before the first day at school and lay in a stock of school supplies. Of course, this is not a whole of a to-do-before-school list, so in order to meet the situation head-on, look up school tips for parents there. Another good idea is to search for educational apps for children to reinforce child's thinking and not to fall behind the school curriculum. For your child to star in the classroom it may be of current importance to explore the collection of educational apps for preschoolers and kindergarteners.

It is an open secret that practice makes perfect that's why we advise you to go over the learning material before school begins and make sure that your kid spends some of the summertime on the training of basic subjects such as reading, writing, math, etc. By the way, we have also been prepared for a new academic year releasing interactive worksheets that you can pass through together with your kids. One more thing to remember is writing skills that your child can sharpen with the help of updated cursive worksheets from Kids Academy that we reissued for your special benefit.
